

Garden Gratitude: 2021 Visitors' Virtual Photography Contest

LEARN MORE ABOUT OUR ADULT & YOUTH FINALISTS

Ruth Parker

Sacred Lotus Pondscape

Sabine Rehm

Cattail Shadows in the Snow -

Early snow day morning, all is perfect, all is quiet and a bright sun allows for striking shadows.

Laura Ducceschi

An Abundance Of Blossoms - The blooming flowers in the garden are representative of how the garden helps people bloom and grow. A garden is a sheltering place where people feel safe, away from the everyday worries and stresses of the world.

Kathy Woehl

The Dancing Red Oak –
Always remember to look up to the canopy!

Lori Lighton

Layers of Leaves - From a young age, I have been grateful for trees and their spectacular show every autumn. Some years are brief and explosive. Other years are quick and muted. There are years when the autumn show ends in mere days. This year autumn was long-lasting with hints beginning in September and riotous color continuing on into November. Storms and winds did not diminish this glorious year. It came in layers, like these leaves. And I savored the many days and flavors of this fall.

Marcy Hammond

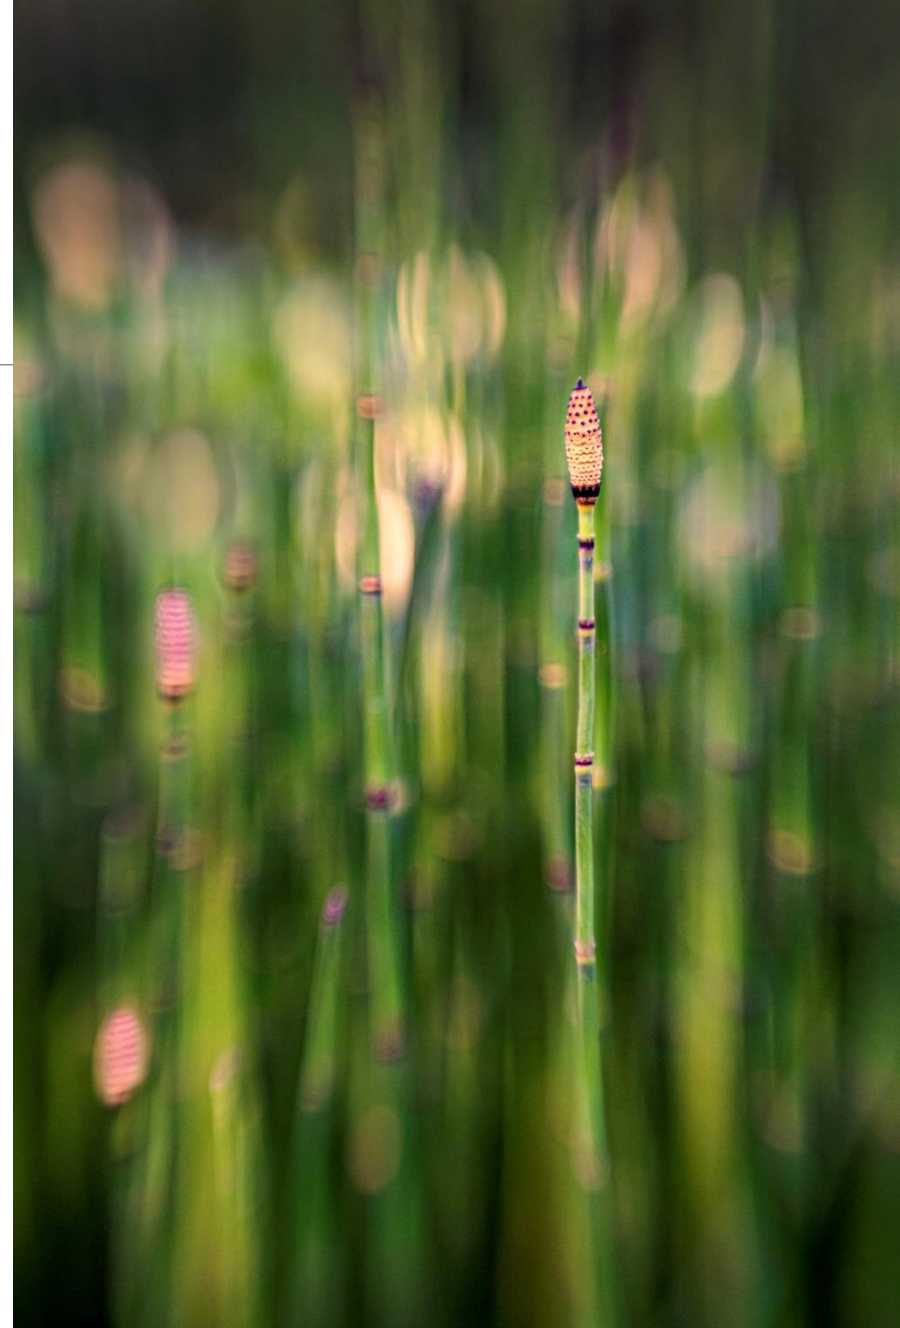

The Brilliant Red Cardinal –
Northern Cardinals cheer up in winter. The abundance of fruit in Jenkins Arboretum makes them sing joyfully.

Meg Boscov

Equisetum –

Amidst the expanse of Jenkins Arboretum,
I marvel at the small details. Delving into the horsetails by the glorious pond,
I felt delight and gratitude to find a slight conical head, which reminded me that beauty can be found everywhere.

Tom Bernard

Untitled - A different interpretation and feeling, I converted it to BW (Tri-Tone).
Light in the image is dark, luminous and perhaps a little sensuous.

Andrew Hendrickson

Picture of the Pond –

I am thankful for a place to walk around and get out of the house during COVID.

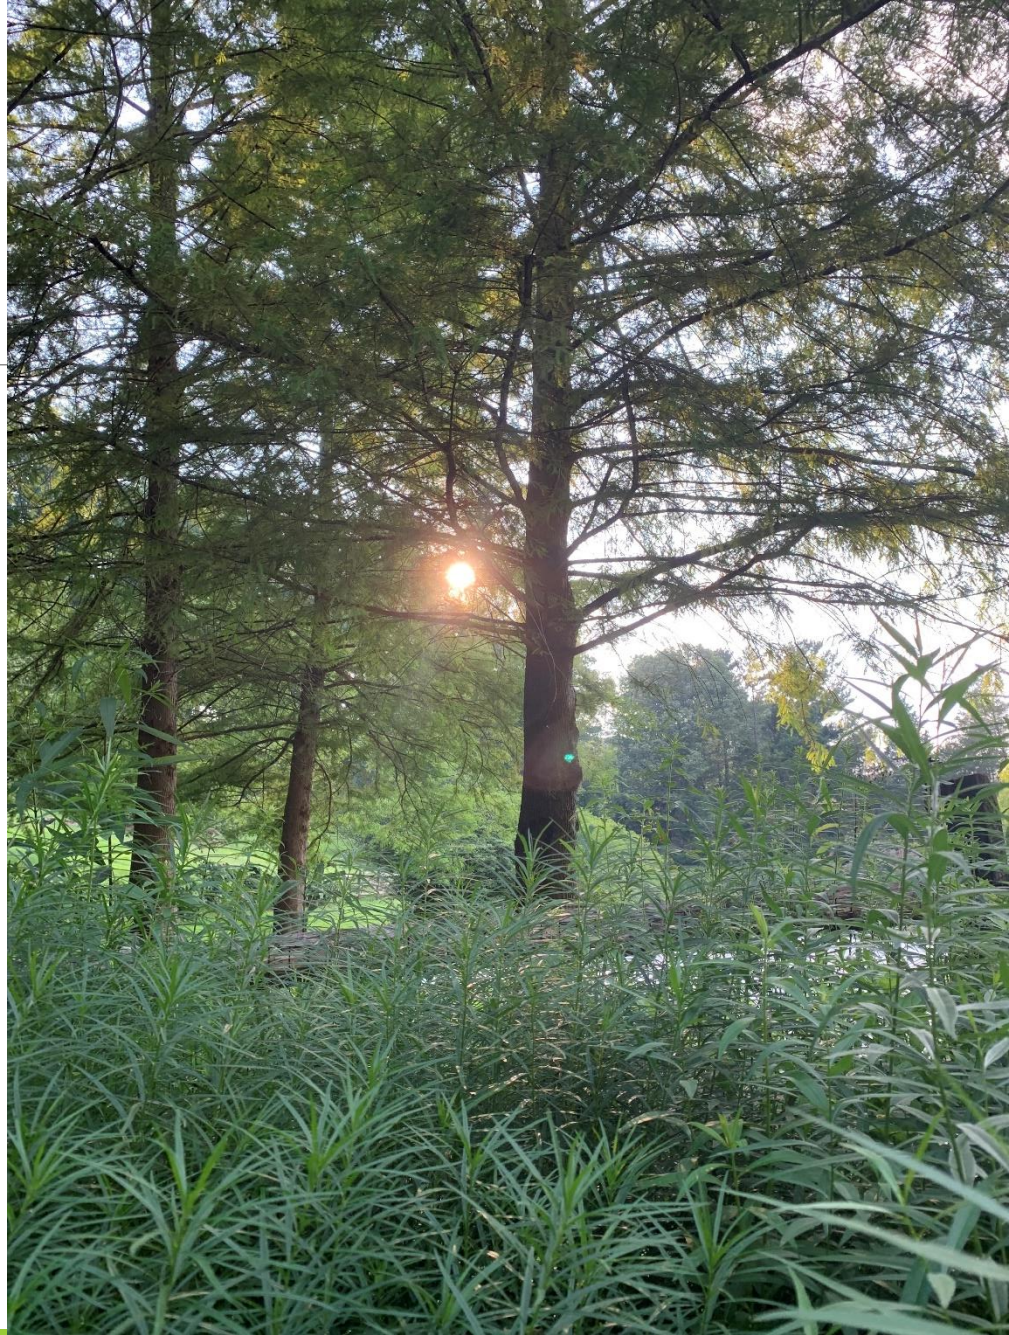

Louis Snyder

Golden Hour –
Trees along the main path

Will Hendrickson

The Sun Shines Through –
I like how it's a normal picture but then
the sun shines through.

Will Hendrickson

Peekaboo – I like the background of vertical lines and the one big pop which is the flower.

Louis Snyder

Fern – fern against tree

Andrew Hendrickson

Spider Eating Bee – I am thankful for the spider which protects the plants.

